them to cope with workplace issues. Additionally, candidates are screened to fit your job specifications.

The process is simple. Transmit detailed job descriptions to our Program Coordinator, who forwards them to over a dozen qualified job development partners. Then we will schedule a suitable time and place for your human resources interviewers to come into Baltimore to meet only those job candidates who are eligible for our transportation and who also meet your job specifications -- or we will arrange one-time transportation to Howard County for interviews.

If you require drug screening, please provide the name of the medical services provider. If you submit background screens, please be as specific as possible as to which histories may be acceptable and which would be unacceptable, prior to scheduling hiring events or interviews.

Howard County, Maryland is one of the most affluent jurisdictions in the entire country. The county's leaders have worked very effectively to create an environment that has attracted businesses of every type to locate in this unique county, strategically situated between the Washington DC market and the Baltimore City market.

Because of the cost of housing in Howard County and its neighboring jurisdictions, entry-level labor simply cannot afford to live in the county in which they work. The situation is compounded by the limits of public transit to Howard County from Baltimore City, which has a large and available workforce, but no means of transport to areas that have the employment opportunities and job growth.

Work on Wheels is the solution

By partnering with non-profit job development programs that can pre-screen and pre-qualify job candidates in Baltimore City to fit your job specifications, we can connect you to good candidates for those hard-to-fill, entry-level jobs, and transport them to and from interviews and work in Howard County.

“Work on Wheels has been more than a transportation link. They have been a great help in sourcing and screening candidates, based on the specifications we have given them.”

Lucy Madert, Retail Recruitment Manager
Safeway – Eastern Division
